- Content Description and Objectives:
- Define what CBD (cannabidiol) is, where it comes from, and how it differs from THC.
- Learn how the brain receives and processes CBD.
- Identify and note scientific studies and findings.
- Identify clinician biases in support of, against, or neutral about CBD.
- Address the many CBD products on the market and have examples of several available for viewing at the training.
- Discuss implications and ethical considerations of mental health and substance use disorder private practitioners and organizations as many clients are seeking CBD products to treat their own symptoms.
